The stomach Most of the medications available for the treatment of gastrointestinal disorders appear on this quiz. The treatment of gastrointestinal disorders is primarily driven by the severity of the underlying disorder. Overall gastrointestinal examination often includes an assessment of the rectum as the rectum is likely to have the most obvious abnormalities. The patient should be assessed with a thorough history and examination as symptoms such as diarrhoea and bleeding and painless abdominal distention, tenderness and rigidity and abdominal mass can be present. Although any digestive disease can affect elderly people, there are some gastrointestinal diseases that are more common in this age group. Vomiting that is due to gastrointestinal bleeding, reflux esophagitis, peptic ulcer disease, stomach ulcers, diverticulitis, constipation, diabetes, postoperative ileus, bowel obstruction and depression are some common gastrointestinal disorders in the elderly. Obstructive jaundice is one of the common conditions associated with old age and can be mistaken for bowel obstruction. Blood in the stool is common with viral gastroenteritis and is caused by the virus replicating in the mucosal cells of the colon. Vomiting is common with bacterial gastroenteritis and may be accompanied by fever, vomiting and diarrhoea. One of the most common gastrointestinal problems in elderly people is constipation. Examination should be carried out to exclude bowel obstruction and a localised perforation. Diarrhoea in the elderly is usually caused by changes in the gut microbiota as a result of old age or medications. Other causes include cholangitis, liver abscess, pancreatitis, Crohn's disease, radiation enteritis, acute appendicitis and common bile duct stone. Isolated pyloric outflow obstruction can present with symptoms such as vomiting and pain on swallowing. Esophagitis is another common gastrointestinal condition in the elderly that is associated with acid-reflux disease. It should be noted that it is associated with gastro-oesophageal reflux disease and is often diagnosed on endoscopy. Patients who present with unexplained gastrointestinal bleeding should
