Well, it's been a minute since I've posted, so that means it's time for a little update. Here's what's going on! OK, there have been a few changes in the past couple of weeks. I've found that the zip file has been working on the old machines for a long time, but it was hard-coded to a single computer. In the last couple of weeks, we've figured out a way to pull it off the old Win 7 computers and run it on new Win 7 computers as well. Since I was running into a few minor problems, I decided to push it to a newer version that would be compatible with both. This took about a week to get it up and running on Windows 10. It appears to be working better on older computers, as well. I've also been working on some little new projects and ideas. The first thing I've been working on is a Minecraft adventure map. I started it as a project that I was going to use to experiment with some new 2D art and patterns. Since that turned into an experiment in modding, I'm not sure if I'll finish it. It's been running on a server for a few weeks and has been very successful, but I've spent so much time improving it that I'm not sure I want to be a Minecraft modder. So, I don't know if this is going to be my project or not. I also built a simple interface for a flight simulator that I started a while back. It's in C#, WPF, and it was pretty easy to build. I found that it ran pretty well on older Win 7 machines, but my WiFi internet was too fast for it to run smoothly. Since I 09e8f5149f

The parties disagree over the first criterion of § 2-302: "respecting the goods as to which a payment was received by the person making the payment." The defendant contends that the only goods for which payment was made by the plaintiff were the title and guaranty clearances on the van. The plaintiff contends that the parties agreed that the plaintiff would undertake an inventory of the other goods on the Mercedes Benz which the plaintiff had sold to the defendant and recover from the defendant the outstanding purchase price of those goods. It further contends that the defendant authorized the plaintiff to pay the outstanding purchase price of the goods for which payment has not been received. The parties agree that, as an offset to the amount due under the plaintiff's right of offset, the defendant is to be allowed a general contribution claim of $4,620. In addition, the parties agree that as a result of the plaintiff's breach of its warranty of merchantability to the defendant, the defendant is entitled to recover $10,000 as a *64 credit. From this, it is evident that the outstanding purchase price of the goods for which payment has not been received by the defendant is less than the $38,860 which the defendant paid to the plaintiff for the Mercedes Benz. The defendant, however, contends that the plaintiff's sale of the Mercedes Benz was a credit sale under the "credit and collection" clauses of the parties' agreements. The credit and collection clause of the parties' agreements states, in pertinent part: "2.1 Unless otherwise agreed, Seller's payment for any goods delivered shall be due in accordance with the following schedule: "A) Payment for Goods Received (P) shall be due within 30
